Alex Jessiman left town on Friday last for a couple of weeks vacation round the coast.

Mrs. Alex Gordon has been spending a vacation at Delta, returning home on Thursday last.

A. K. McLean left town for his home in Alta Vista, B.C., on Wednesday.

Frank Ruddy was seen wearing a smile that won't wash off on Tuesday when he received a total exemption from military service from Registrar Carson, so long as he farms.

More property has changed hands during the past week. Sid Willis having secured the Armstrong premises corner of Ross and Hammond street.

See Dr. M. Mecklenburg, the Eye Sight Expert, about your eyes, will again be at the Hotel, Crossfield, on Tuesday, October 29th.

Frank Goodsell has taken upon himself the duties of housekeeping, having moved into the Hendrickson premises south-west of town.

A surprise party on Mr. and Mrs. Morrow took place on Monday night, while enjoying an evening with Mr. and Mrs. Cavander a number of friends gathered together, the purpose being to present Mrs. Morrow with a small token of respect from the Ladies Aid and the Choir of the Union Church. Mrs. M. Thomas in a few words handed to Mrs. Morrow a beautiful Casserole. The recipient and Mr. Morrow briefly thanked the donors.

At the Church of the Ascension on Sunday morning last the Rev. J. P. Dingle spoke with much feeling of the loss which the community was about to sustain through the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Morrow. The speaker alluded to Mr. Morrow's admirable work on the magistrate's bench, to the diligent and painstaking and extraordinarily conscientious manner in which he had carried on his duties as Principal of the Public School, and to his many sterling qualities as a citizen and community worker, which had earned for him the admiration and respect of the whole district.

Mr. and Mrs. Morrow expect to leave on Monday next for their new home at Kingston, Ont., where we wish Mr. Morrow all the success possible in whatever walk in life he thinks fit to follow.—Ed.

Who is to be Mr. Morrow's successor as J.P. for the Village. We note a meeting is to be held in A. W. Gordon's office, on Saturday at 3 p.m., to consider the matter. Now you aspirants for fame, who is to have the alluring letters behind his cognomen, J.P.

We record with feelings of regret the death of Mrs. Janett Ingles Twedale, aged 43 years, which took place at Calgary, on Tuesday, Sept. 10th. The deceased lady leaves a husband and two sons to mourn their loss. The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon, Rev. J. P. Dingle officiated.

What Will You Do For Help?

FARM help is scarce, but this condition can be relieved to a marked degree by using machines that accomplish more work in a given time with less man power. Why should the farmer cling to horses—a slow, expensive means of power? In every other business is adopting the truck and thereby reducing the cost of hauling, speeding up deliveries, and saving for human needs the food that the horses would otherwise consume?

The motor driven truck can work constantly at maximum load under the blinding summer sun, or in the coldest weather. Unlike the horse it needs no feed, and eats only while in actual use, and when the day's work is done, it requires very little attention, and leaves you free for other "chores" about the place. Then, it can be housed in one-quarter the space of the horses, wagon and harness it replaces. It is a mistaken idea that a truck is useful only for driving upon paved roads. The Ford can be driven all over the farms and used for hauling grain, potatoes, fruit, roots, fertilizer, wood, stock, milk or any other product. The speed it travels, the time it saves, and its low upkeep cost appeal very strongly to all users of the Ford Truck. If you need help, order your Ford One Ton Truck today.

All prices subject to war tax charges, except trucks and chassis

Local and General

We are asked to announce that the date of the Boys' and Girls' Pig Club Fair is on Saturday, October 12th. Everybody will be welcome.

ENTERTAINMENT AT UNION CHURCH.—This will be held next Friday, the 20th, at 8:30 p.m. The principal feature of the programme will be the sketch "Box and Cox," which is of a very pleasing and laughable nature and occupies 35 minutes in the presentation. The Orchestra, whose presence is always welcome, will render a number of special selections. A Male Sextette has been formed for this concert and will appear twice on the programme. In addition to these group entertainers there will be vocal solos and duets, piano solos and duets, and readings, which should provide a strong and attractive programme. All will be presented by local talent. Do not fail to attend and support your own people. The price of admission is 50c, for adults and 25c for children.

A Karn Organ for Sale, in good order. Will sell cheap. Apply C. Wicks, Box 76.

UNION CHURCH, CROSSFIELD.

—Dr. Thomas, Principal of Alberta College, Edmonton, will be the speaker on Sunday, and this will be observed as Educational Day. The school and the university are great national institutions and we cannot emphasize too much the value of an education in the development of the individual. Dr. Thomas stands for the Christian ideal in education. His messages will be valuable and uplifting. He will speak at Bottrel at 11 a.m., Beaver Dam, 2 p.m., Sunshine at 4 p.m., and Crossfield at 7:30 p.m. The pastor Rev. R. K. Swenerton will be present and conduct these services. Sunday the 22nd will be Missionary Inaugural Day.

War and Disease

What Medical Science Has Done

By Lieut. R. S. M. STURGES
(Author of "On the Remainder of Our Front")

To say that in way the microscope is more deadly than the bullet is a truism, a platitude which will bear repetition. The conditions of active service are ideal for the propagation of every kind of disease in its most virulent form. Large numbers of men are collected together in confined spaces; all kinds of hygiene and sanitary accommodation are necessarily of an improvised nature; microbes find a fertile breeding ground, and men exhausted, wet and cold have not the power to resist their attacks. In fact, in war there are two enemies to be reckoned with; the one is human and fights openly, the other is the microbe which attacks insidiously and in secret. Of these the latter is the more dangerous, and its defeat is essential to victory over the former.

It is only necessary to turn back the pages of history to see how the defeat of an army may be brought about by disease. It was the great plague at Athens—to take a classic example—which delivered the Athenian Empire into the hands of Sparta; and in more modern times the invasion of Russia by Napoleon the Great, was mainly defeated by spotted typhus.

A few figures will serve to show how much more dangerous to an army disease was in the past than the efforts of the enemy. In the Napoleonic wars Wellington lost 100,000 men from disease as against 21,000 from the French; and fat to qualify but have failed to freshen within fifteen months after the commencement of the test; a list of bulls open to registration and an index to owners. This who's forms a valuable and use book of dairy records that can be had free on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

three years earlier, in which only seven died on the battlefield, whereas disease accounted for no less than 6,000.

Later British forces in various outlandish places have produced figures almost as bad. I will give but one instance: in Afghanistan, between 1878 and 1880, 1,122 British troops died of disease and only 161 from wounds, while the number of troops admitted to hospital during that time was nearly three times as great as the average strength at one time of the British forces engaged in that campaign.

DEATH RATE DOUBLE THAT OF WOUNDS

The statistics of the South African war are more interesting, as being of more recent date and the product of a much larger campaign, in South Africa between 1899 and 1902 the average strength of the British army was 206,226; the number admitted to hospital for wounds was 21,292, as against 404,126 admitted for disease. Of the deaths that occurred in the war 14,024 were caused by sickness and only 6,956 by wounds received in action.

It will be seen therefore that prior to the war was never less than double that caused by weapons of war.

Now turn to the statistics of the present war so far as it concerns the British losses. It has been calculated that in this war, for every 10 men killed in action, only one man has died of disease; this amazing revolution has been brought about by the tremendous advance that has been made in sanitation, hygiene and the like; an advance, which is directly attributable to the war. The war has brought these matters to the front and has directed to them the attention of the greatest brains of the day. The result is truly remarkable.

But that is not all. The war has also been the cause of a great advance in the science of surgery, which has enabled thousands of lives to be saved. In former days it was reckoned that an average of 50 per cent of men wounded in battle ultimately succumbed to their wounds. To-day, in spite of the fact that over 80 per cent of the wounds are caused by shells with all the accompanying horrors of laceration and infection, of those men who reach the field hospitals alive, no less than 80 per cent recover.

GREAT PROGRESS IN SAVING LIFE

A realization of these facts throws a new light onto the nature of modern war. War is always considered as a dealer of death, never as a saviour of life; it is folded with the introduction of manifold weapons of destruction, never with the discovery of means of preservation.

In face of the long casualty lists, the great progress that is being made in the saving of human life is forgotten; but it deserves recognition. Medicine has developed the art of killing it is true, the number of deaths inflicted in action in this war is in proportion to the number of troops engaged is greater than ever it has been before. But the art of healing and of preventing disease has developed far more than the art of killing. The death rate from disease has been reduced beyond all knowledge, so that, in spite of the increased death rate from wounds, in spite of the long casualty lists, in spite of the enormous death which increase in number and in percentage day by day, the net death rate in this war in proportion to the numbers engaged is the lowest ever recorded. At the beginning of this year it was calculated that the death rate from all causes in the British army since the beginning of the war is but three per cent per annum of the British forces serving with the colours in all parts of the world.

At the beginning of this article I said that to refer to the microscope as deadlier than the bullet in war was a truism; I was wrong. Of other times and of other places it is true enough no doubt, but on the British front-to-day it has been proved to be entirely and completely false.

A Hand Book for Dairymen

Report No. 10 of the Canadian Record of performance for Pure-bred Dairy Cattle constitutes a hand book that dairymen can hardly do without. It contains the rules and regulations governing the records of performance; the standards for registration; the records of performance of all pure-bred dairy cattle in the country; convenient summaries of reports, exact details of the records achieved and the addresses of the owners; a record of the cows that have produced sufficient milk and fat to qualify but have failed to freshen within fifteen months after the commencement of the test; a list of bulls open to registration and an index to owners. This who's forms a valuable and use book of dairy records that can be had free on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Carmen's Messenger

"Then it looks as if he meant to test my statements. Did he seem surprised to learn I was staying here?"

"It was hard to tell what the fellow thought, but somehow I felt that he expected to find your story true. He, however, gave me no information. What do you suppose he wants?"

"I can't imagine; what's the puzzle? What makes him so strange?" It is that I am the interest. Gordon took in me was, to some extent, benevolent."

"But why should it be benevolent, if he is the group for suspecting you?" Featherstone asked.

Foster glanced at him keenly.
There was a change in his tone, one which had grown less casual, but he admitted that he was being subjected to some strain. It would be certainly the distance from the country people and he went to an inn in the struggling little town.

Next morning he set off on foot toward the winding Dale. It got dark as they followed the river, and soon afterwards Foster alighted at a small town. Nobody else left him in the two hours that he was in the inn, and he went to an inn in the struggling little town.

About four o'clock in the afternoon he reached another inn, of a barren, moorland, and looked around.

The road ran back into the strong yellow glow of the sunset, but it crossed a marshy field, and there was nothing in sight.

It was very rough in places, but he thought a skilful driver could take a car over it. To his surprise, the high ground fell away and he thought he could strike another road to Jedburgh in the dark or through the blossoming heath. There seemed to be no reason why he should do so, but he left the road that ran down hill, and came to a road that ran down hill.

He and his horse found shelter in a marsh field and got smoother as it followed the burn. Then a wooden bridge spanned a deep, wooded gash between the stems where the sheep went through, ran down the water-side, and Foster sat down on a stone and studied his map again. The sun had set, and it was now dark.

He reached the station undetected, where a Midland express would shortly start for the south, but it would be difficult to leave a car in the big manufacturing towns, and there was a stoppage train, and the other on the North British line, which traverses the Border hills. Foster preferred the neighborhood, because he was beginning to think it and it was not far from the Garth, but after a few moments' consideration he went to the Midland ticket window.

A row of passengers were waiting their turn and as he took his place in the line a man crossed the floor and stood before him. There was nothing suspicious in this, but his fellow had not come in by the entrance hall, and if he had been in the station, it was curious that he had not taken the stairs. When his turn came, Foster asked for a ticket to Appleby in a husky voice, and when the booking clerk demanded, "Where are you going?" he said, "To Carlisle." The man behind was leaning forward.

"Appleby," said the man, who had stopped to look at the map, "that town was not far off, and getting his ticket, joined the passengers on the platform. As he did so, the long train came, and took up its position.

The man behind was leaning forward, "I have this map," he said, "and see where seven Frenchmen on trial in Paris for espionage, claim they are 'journalists,' but show no ability to write?"

"What does the practical newspaper man?" That seems to describe a journalist pretty well." The Argonaut.

He wondered who was on his track and with what object. Daly would gain nothing by intercepting him, but he might be interested in his movements, but he was being watched, and felt uneasy. He was not sure that he had sent the last message to Appleby, although he hoped he had.

The train, which stopped now and then, was moving slowly. The road led into the valley of the Ede. The valley narrowed as they sped through, and the woods beside the stream, and when the line turned up the hill, he could see the village rising ahead. The trees and rich cultivation were gradually left behind, the air grew drier and less temperate, and the road led to the winding Dale. It got dark as they followed the river, and soon afterwards Foster alighted at a small town. Nobody else left him in the two hours that he was in the inn, and he went to an inn in the struggling little town.

Next morning he set off on foot toward the winding Dale. It began walking leisurely, because he was going to Jedburgh, but had not made up his mind if he would get there in time to catch the train. He had not yet made up his mind if he would stop before he reached the town.

About four o'clock in the afternoon he reached another inn, of a barren, moorland, and looked around.

Competitions for Dairymen

Possibilities of Industry are Only Beginning to Be Realized

Despite the remarkable development of the dairy industry in the Prairie Provinces of Canada during the past ten years, it is still considered of considerably greater expansion. The immense possibilities of this industry are only beginning to be realized by the people of Western Canada. To further encourage it, and to lead to the adoption of the most modern and economical methods of dairying, the efforts of provincial governments are constantly devoted.

The Saskatchewan government has just announced a series of competitions open to all farmers in the province.

Probably the most important competition is the one open to all farmers in the province, and will consist of five cows. This competition has been arranged with a view to increasing the production among the herds of the province. Prizes will be awarded to the farmers whose herds produce the largest proportionate output of butterfat. This competition will be held in two stages, the first being a competition between the winners of the five cows. The announcement of the winners is expected to be made about October 30.

The records of all herds will be taken since November 1 of last year and tabulated for the year ending on October 31, 1918, and a competition will be held for the number of cows milled throughout the year.

Creamery men will also compete in a contest for all-round average. Each creamery man will submit a small box of butter for storage each month for the next six months.

The creamery men will represent Saskatchewan in the inter-provincial competition to be held during January.

Creamery men from Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba will compete in the "Ideal Creamery Competition."

In the "Ideal Creamery Competition," prizes will be awarded to the creamery managers for the creamery which has the best location.

This is the only competition of the kind held in Canada, and is put on with a view to creating interest in the creamery business, and in planting trees, shrubs, and laying out lawns.

Competition will also be held in which creamery butter will be tested to determine the highest average score for the year at the grading station. This will be a test of the butter quality and the care taken throughout the year and will not be based on any one churning.

Competitions such as these will give the creamery men a greater interest in the industry, but should also result in an all-round improvement in existing methods wherever possible.

The Motto of British Airmen

After Results, and Nothing Else Counts

British front in France as follows:

The formal modesty of the British Royal Air Force, however, completely contradicts just a hint of the high efficiency of the British bombing squadrons. For example, a day's work may consist of dropping fifteen tons of bombs on the enemy in the hours when the weather permits.

It is omitted to state that the raids are not always conducted in the most favorable weather conditions, clouds and a wind that ordinarily would have been a sufficient excuse to postpone the mission.

British airmen have now begun to lose its charm. Though the allies have been largely working out their future economic relations, the British and understanding among them that Germany and her vassals shall enjoy no access to allied raw materials, no access to allied markets, no access to the high ways of the world, no intercourse with civilized humanity, unless and until Germany shows herself fit for admission into a league of nations at the allies' insistence.

There is no possibility of an economic status quo ante bellum.

As we predicted on last September, in dealing with Herr Hindenburg's "Central Europe" scheme, Germany forces the economic weapon, not to a complete standstill, but to a standstill.

Germany has now begun to lose its charm. The allies have been largely working out their future economic relations, the British and understanding among them that Germany and her vassals shall enjoy no access to allied raw materials, no access to allied markets, no access to the high ways of the world, no intercourse with civilized humanity, unless and until Germany shows herself fit for admission into a league of nations at the allies' insistence.

There is no possibility of an economic status quo ante bellum.

The German people need to understand their own mistakes.

The first is that while the allied conception of a league of nations contemplates ultimately the inclusion in it of a representative Germany, Germany has also maintained an absolute economic ban upon Germany, and their present political and military institutions and the dreams that still remain.

The second is that the longer the war lasts, the deeper will the German people go into a condition of military domination, fiscal terrorism, and racial persecution, based with such a system.

of the results accomplished that they are responsible for the impetus which sent aeroplanes out with same crews, carrying loads of oil, gasoline, and bombs immediately after one mission is fulfilled.

A German Illusion

The Moral and Economic handicap Under Which All Germans Work

One of the illusions most sedulously cultivated in Germany has been that "after the war" there would be a return to the economic status quo, or that subjects of states would go on living as they did before.

This illusion has now begun to lose its charm. Though the allies have been largely working out their future economic relations, the British and understanding among them that Germany and her vassals shall enjoy no access to allied raw materials, no access to allied markets, no access to the high ways of the world, no intercourse with civilized humanity, unless and until Germany shows herself fit for admission into a league of nations at the allies' insistence.

There is no possibility of an economic status quo ante bellum.

As we predicted on last September, in dealing with Herr Hindenburg's "Central Europe" scheme, Germany forces the economic weapon, not to a standstill, but to a standstill.

Germany has now begun to lose its charm. The allies have been largely working out their future economic relations, the British and understanding among them that Germany and her vassals shall enjoy no access to allied raw materials, no access to allied markets, no access to the high ways of the world, no intercourse with civilized humanity, unless and until Germany shows herself fit for admission into a league of nations at the allies' insistence.

Name Airplane "Winnipeg"

"Winnipeg" is the name of one of four flying machines which have been donated to the Royal Flying Corps by Mr. James C. Monteith, grain dealer. The other machines are called "Toronto," "Montreal" and "Edmonton." The airplanes recently were inspected by the Governor-General.

A Willing Sacrifice

The war department announces that the new flying machines require all the castor oil for lubrication purposes, and we have resolved patriotically to turn over our share to the government.—Columbus Dispatch.
